Agriculture has played an important role in Door County's culture and economy since the 1800s. These days, Door County is still home to many family-owned and -operated orchards that produce cherries and apples as well as farms that focus on berries, dairy, and other products. With their dedication to locally sourced food, these farms supply food and produce to local families, grocers, and chefs so they can craft dishes that truly capture the Door County farm-to-table spirit.

DOOR COUNTY CHERRIES

Cherries are front and center at local orchards and are ripe for the picking mid-July to mid-August. The cherry industry is a staple of Door County and has a long and interesting history on the peninsula. At one point, Door County was annually harvesting 10-percent of all cherries grown in the country!

DOOR COUNTY APPLES

While not as noticed as the cherry, Door County falls bring about a variety of delicious apples. Not only can you buy apples but also apple cider, apple cider doughnuts, applesauce, and more. Apples are ripe mid-September to mid-October.

Visitors will find plenty of orchards and farms to visit, dishes to taste and products to take home with them.

FARMERS MARKETS

Another way to experience local agriculture is through farmers markets. Many farmers and growers will bring their fresh produce and homemade products to sell at weekly farmers markets held in various communities.
